Biographical Note

Helen Margaret Post (1907-1978), older sister of photographer Marion Post Wolcott, was born in Bloomfield, New Jersey. After graduating in 1932 from Alfred University, in upstate New York, with a degree in applied arts, Post taught school for a short while. By 1933 she went to Europe to study photography and apprenticed with noted Viennese photographer Trude Fleischmann, who taught Post composition and darkroom techniques.

Post returned to the United States and started a career as a freelance photographer. Her specialization was documenting educational institutions, but she also accepted other assignments. In 1937 Post married Rudolf Modley, an economist and management consultant. As a result of her desire to travel with Modley while he researched erosion and conservation techniques in the West, Post began photographing American Indians. From 1936 to 1941, she traveled throughout the West and Southwest documenting Sioux, Navajo, Apache, Hopi, and Pueblo Indians. Like her older contemporary Laura Gilpin, Post gained the trust and friendship of the Indians and thereby gained access to traditionally closed societies. The resulting images, mostly made with a 70 mm Roliflex, offer a realistic view of the Indians' daily activities. Post sold some of her photographs to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to use in various publications. Her images also were used as illustrations in As Long as the Grass Shall Grow by Oliver La Farge, Brave-Against-the-Enemy by Ann Clarke, and numerous magazine articles, and occasionally, were exhibited between 1940 and 1978. However, most of her collection of over 5,000 images of American Indians was never published or exhibited.

Post abandoned her photographic career to work assisting refugees fleeing Europe during World War II and later to raise her two children and to manage a country property. In the 1970s, she attempted to resume her career; she planned to visit the Indians she had photographed in the late 1930s and photograph them or their descendants, but she never followed through with the project.

Scope and Content Note

The Helen Post Papers (1938-1975) contains correspondence, newspaper articles, research notes written to identify people and places in her photographs, and material that Post collected on various aspects of Native American life. The materials in the collection are arranged by subject. The correspondence is arranged in alphabetical order by the author's surname, then chronologically.

Among the highlights are the handwritten notes that Post made to identify the subjects of her photographs. Some descriptions include numbers for negatives, which are in the Amon Carter Museum of American Art photography collection.

Inventory

Series I. Native American Materials

Scope and Content Note: Post collected information regarding Native Americans. These materials document customs and rituals, the sizes and locations of reservations, and the health conditions of people living on the reservations. Typed manuscripts for Brave-Against-the-Enemy and for short stories by Eugene Wounded Horse are also included, as well as handwritten notes on individuals and tribes, newsletters, and newspaper clippings.
